SATURDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 16, 1858, Pain.

THE TWO HOMES. Two men on their way home met at a street-crossing, and then walked on together. They were neighbors and triends. "This has been a very hard day," said Mr. Freeman, in a gloomy voice. And as they walked homeward they discouraged each other, and made darker the clouds that obscured their whole horizon.

"Good evening," was at last said hurriedly; and the two men passed into their homes. Mr. Walcott entered the room where his wife and children were gathered, and with out speaking to any one, seated himself in a chair, and leaning his head back, closed his eves. His countenance were a sad, weary, exhausted look. He had been seated thus for only a few minutes, when his wife said in a fearful voice:

"More trouble again." "What is the matter?" asked Mr. Walcott, almost starting. "John has been sent home from school."

"What?" Mr. Walcott partly rose from his chair. "He has been suspended for bad conduct."

Oh, dear!" grouned Mr. Walcott, "where "Up in his room; I sent him there as soon as he came home. You'll have to do some thing with him. He'll be ruined if he goes on in this way. I'm out of all heart with Mr. Walcott, excited as much by the man-per in which his wife conveyed unpleasant information as by the information itself, started up under the blind impulse of the mement, and going to the room where John had been sent on coming home from school, punished the boy severely, and this without listening to the explanations which the poor child tried to make him hear. "Father," said the boy, with forced calmness, after the cruel stripes had ceased: "I wasn't to blame, and if you will go with me to the teacher, I can prove myself inno-Mr. Walcott had never known his son to tell an untruth, and the words fell with a rebuke upon his beart. "Very well, we will see about that," he auswered, with forced sternness; and leaving the room he went down stairs, feeling much more uncomfortable than when he went up. Again he seated bimself in his large chair, again leaned back his weary head and closed his heavy eyelids. Sadder was his face than before. As he sat thus, his eldestdaughter, in her sixteenth year, came and stood by him. She held a paper in her hand. "Father;" he opened his eyes; "here's my quarter's bill. Can't I have the money to take to school with me in the morning?" "I am afraid not," answered Mr. Walcott, half in despair. "Nearly all the girls will bring in their money to morrow, and it mortifies me to be behind the others." The daughter spoke fretfully. Mr. Walcott waved her aside with his hand, and she went off muttering and pouting.

"It is mortifying," said Mrs. Walcott, a little sharply; "and I don't wonder that Helen feels annoved about it. The bill has to be paid, and I dont see why it may not be done as well first as last.

To this Mr. Walcott made no answer .-The words but added annother pressure to the heavy burden under which he was already staggering. After a silence of some moments, Mrs. Walcott said:

"The coals are all gone."

keep the fire in."

"There's been a shameful waste some where," said Mr. Walcott, with strong emphasis, starting up and moving about the room with a very disturbed manner.

"So you always say, when any thing runs ont," answered Mrs. Walcott, rather tartly. "The barrel of flour is gone also; but I suppose you have done your part, with the rest, in using it up."

Mr. Walcott returned to his chair, and scating bimself, leaned back his bead and closed his eyes as at first. H w sad, and weary and hopeless he felt! The burdens of the day had seemed almost too heavy for him; but he had borne up bravely. To gather strength for a renewed struggle with adverse circumstances, he had come home .--Alas! that the process of exhaustion should still go on-that where only strength could be looked for on earth, no strength was given.

When the tea bell was rung, Mr. Walcott made no movement to obey the summons. "Come to supper," said his wife coldly.

But he did not stir. "Are you not coming to supper?" she called to him, as she was leaving the room. "I don't wish for anything this evening .-

My bead aches very much," be answered.
"In the dumps again," muttered Mrs Walcott to herself. "It's as much as one's life is worth to ask for money, or to say anything is wanted." Ard she kept on her way to the dining-room. When she returned, her husband was still sitting where she had left

"Shall I bring you a cup of tea?" she ask-

"No. I don't wish for anything." "What's the matter, Mr. Walcott? What do you lock so troubled about, as if you hadn's a friend in the world? What have I done to

There was no answer, for there was not a shade of real sympathy in the voice that made the queries, but rather of querelous dissatisfaction. A few moments Mrs. Walcott stood behind ber husband, but as he did not seem inclined to answer questions, she turned away from him, and resumed the employment which had been interrupted by the ringing of the tea bell.

The whole evening passed without the occurrence of a single incident that gave a healthful pulsation to the sick heart of Mr. Walcott. No thoughtful kindness was manifested by any member of the family; but on the centrary, a narrow regard for self, and a looking to him only, that he might supply the means of self gratification.

No wonder, from the pressure which was on him, that Mr. Walcott felt utterly discouraged. He retired early, and sought to find that relief from mental disquietude in sleep which he had vainly hoped for in the bosom of his family. But the whole night passed in broken slumbers and disturbing dreams .-From the observess morning meal, at which he was reminded of the quarter's bill that must be paid, of the coals and flour that were out, and of the necessity of supplying Mrs. Walcott's empty purse, he went forth to meet the d fliculties of another day, faint at heart, almost hopeless of success A confident spirit, sustained by home affections, would have carried him through; but unsupported as he was, the burden was too heavy for him and he sank under it. The day that opened so unpropitiously closed upon him a ruined

Let us look in for a few moments upon Mr. Freeman, a friend and neighbor of Mr. Walcott. He, also, had come home weary, dispirited and almost sick. The trials of the day had been unusually severe, and when he look d anxiously forward to scan the future, not even a gleam of light was seen along the

As he stopped across the threshold of his dwelling, a par g shot through his heart, for the thought came: "How slight the present hold upon all these comforts." Not for himself, but for his wife and children was the "Father's come!" cried a glad little voice on the stairs, the moment his lootfall sounded in the passage; then quick, pattering feet were heard-and then a tiny form was springing into his arms. Before reaching the sitting room above, Alice, the eldest daughter, was by his side, her arm drawn fondly within his, and her loving eyes lifted to his face. "Are you not late, dear?" It was the gen-le voice of Mrs Freeman. Mr. Freeman could not trust bimself to answer. He was too deeply troubled in spirit to assume at the moment a cheerful one, and he had no wish tosadden the hearts that loved bim, by letting the depression from which he was suffering become too clearly apparent. But the eyes of Mrs. Freeman saw quickly below the surface.

"Are you not well, E. bert?" she inquired, tenderly, as she drew his large arm chair towards the centre of the room.

"A little headache," he answered, with a light evasion.

Scarcely was Mr. Freeman seated ere a pair of hands was busy with each foot, removing gaiter and shoes and supplying their place with a soft slipper. There was not one in the household who did not feel happier for his return, nor one who did not seek to render him some kind office.

It was impossible, under such a burst of beart-sunshine, for the spirit of Mr. Freeman long to remain shrouded. Almost imperceptible to himself gloomy thoughts gave place to more cheerful ones, and by the time tea was ready, he had half forgotten the fears which had so haunted him though the day.

But they coold not be held back altogether. and their existence was marked during the evening by an unusual silence and abstracion of mind. This was observed by Mrs. the public. Freeman, who, more then half suspecting the cause, kept back from her husband the knowledge of certain matters about which she had intended to speak to him, for she feared they would add to his mental disquietude. During the evening she gleaned from something he said the real cause of his charged aspect. At once her thoughts commenced running in a new channel. By a few leading remarks she drew her busband into conversation on the sufject of home expenses and the propriety of restriction in various points. Many things were mutually pronounced superfluous and easily to be dispensed with, and before sleep fell soothingly on the heavy eyelids of Mr. Freeman that ing had been determined upon-a change

"I see light ahead," were the hopeful words of Mr. Freeman, as he resigned himself to slumber. With renewed strengh of mind and body and a confident spirit be went forth the next day -- a day that he had looked forward to with fear and trembling. And it was only through this renewed arrength and confident spirit that he was able to overcome the difficulties that loomed up, mountain high, before him. Weak despendency would have ruined all. Home had proved his tower of the conflict, be had gone forth again into the "I see light ahead," gave place to "The Kerseys; Cassinets; Tweeds; Servants Blankets, morning breaketh!"— Orange Blossoms, CAUTION.—We beg leave to caution purchasers of our choice OLD MONONGAHELA WHISKIES against the deception and petty fraud which is practised by certain parties in this city and in Baltimore, who have appropriated to themselves exact copies of the Star Brands, long used and designed by us to distinguish our Old Whiskies. We can assure our friends and customers, that the unrivailed quality, everywhere acknowledged, of our choice OLD WHIS-KIES, cannot be equalled by these ingenious invaders of our rights.

Our new establishment, Gissonton Mills, on the Monongahela River, gives us unequalled tacilities for making Whiskey of the choicest kind, from maited and kiln dried grain.

Purchasers of our Old Whiskies will please o notice, the words Gibsonton Mills, and John CHRON. Sons & Co., are inserted in the new Brands which we now adopt; and we deem it a duty we one to our customers and ourselves, to give notice, that we will prosecute and expose any person or persons who may hereafter copy or use our Brands.
